Jennifer McMahon Bio August 2019: HBA

Jennifer McMahon is a Principal at a leading European venture capital firm, Seroba Life Sciences. She is based in the Seroba office in Dublin and is involved in both medtech and biotech deal origination and investments. After graduating from University College Dublin with an honours degree in Pharmacology in 2010, Ms. McMahon entered a Master's degree programme in Biotechnology and Business to further her interest in the interface of biomedical science with commercialisation. Having placed first in her Master's degree in 2011, Ms. McMahon then joined Seroba's Investment Team as an Investment Analyst.

She sits on the board of directors of Endotronix, a Chicago headquartered digital medtech company. She was previously on the board of directors of Biosensia, prior to it merging with Kypha Diagnostics in 2018 and was an observer on the Atlantic Therapeutics board. Ms. McMahon was a Dublin-hub Ambassador of the Sandbox network, a global community for 'exceptional innovators' from 2015 - 2017. In October 2015, Ms. McMahon was recognized as one of Ireland's 'Top 30 Under 30', shaping the future of business in the country. In 2019, Jennifer joined the Advisory Board for the European Healthcare Businesswoman's Association (HBA) and she is also an active member of Level20, an international organisation promoting women in private equity. She guest-lectures on venture capital at University College Dublin, Trinity College Dublin and the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.
