

Emily Basca has spent 15 years in the pharmaceutical and healthcare industry doing what she loves most—communicating with groups about disease states, treatments, medical developments, and gleaning the information that is most clinically relevant to participants. As a facilitator for national and international advisory boards, Emily has conducted focus groups with patients, caregivers, nurses, doctors and allied healthcare professionals. She has moderated hundreds of advisory boards with world-renowned thought leaders in many specialties.

Emily's humor and style help people learn to give impactful and persuasive presentations despite their anxiety or fear of public speaking. She has coached top executives, leading medical experts, college faculty and students of all ages to present their ideas and research to their audiences.

International experience includes training, advisory boards, research, and medical education in Italy, Greece, France, Spain, Switzerland, Argentina, Amsterdam, Mexico, Dubai and Canada. She has led "Train the Trainer" programs in seven countries. She frequently teaches meeting facilitation and speaker training skills.

Emily received her Master's of Science in Gerontology from the University of California.
